Hayfever Guide

Treatment techniques based in Chinese medicine

What is Hayfever?

Hay fever is an allergic reaction to allergens in our environment, affecting the nose, eyes, lungs and sinus cavities. In fact, it is one of the most common respiratory conditions, affecting millions of people in the UK every year. Hay fever causes a slew of very uncomfortable and frustrating symptoms. The most common are itchy eyes and throat, runny nose and sneezing. In severe cases, it can lead to a loss of appetite, insomnia and even depression.

Hay fever strikes when the immune system is overwhelmed by excess allergens. This is even worse if you're leading a stressful, busy life, because your immune system is hugely compromised when the body's stress response is activated.

Stress strains the lungs, creating inflammation and heat, which plays havoc on the immune system.

Stress also disrupts circulation and creates internal heat in the body, which gets stored in the muscles. Poor circulation also impacts immunity.

The digestive system is also disrupted by stress, which leads to food not being digested properly and a loss of valuable nutrients. The digestive system is already sabotaged by our modern lifestyles – imbalanced diets, late night eating and climate stress – all weakening the very organ that helps us cope with allergies

The Yang Sheng perspective

‘Yang Sheng’ means ‘nurture life’. It is the ‘self-care’ part of Chinese medicine: the part you can do for yourself, as a complement to any other treatment you may be undertaking. In addition to physical (visible) symptoms, in Chinese medicine we also consider what is happening with the body at an energetic (invisible) level. ‘Qi’ (pronounced ‘chee’) is the energy that runs through all of us. Even when you sit completely still, there will be some movement happening inside you: your heart is beating, your fluids moving – every cell is constantly in motion.

All of these different types of energy, combined with your breath, is what makes up your ‘qi’. Qi isn’t the same as circulation, but they are linked. When you stimulate your blood flow or move your lymphatic fluid, your qi is also stimulated. Everything flows together. The channels in which qi flows are called meridians. According to Chinese medicine, the quality and movement of qi through the body determines your health. The ideal state is one of smooth flow with no imbalances or blockages, which are called stagnation or stagnant qi. If you have stagnation, whether physical, emotional or spiritual, this will eventually manifest as disease.

Chinese medicine recognises hay fever as a weakness of the lungs and digestive system – both responsible for a strong immune system. The symptoms are a manifestation of the body trying to push excessive allergens out. It’s a warning sign that your body needs help at a deeper level. Strengthening these organs at the root of the problem helps boost immunity and alleviate symptoms.

Steps you can take to help

We treat the root cause and the symptoms together, for a lasting solution to the misery of hay fever. There are some quick and simple yang shen techniques we can employ. Fitting easily into your daily routine, they will help strengthen your lungs, digestive and immune systems. They will also clear heat, inflammation and impeded circulation caused by stress.

General advice

Chinese breathing and bodywork techniques have both been scientifically proven to be effective in reducing stress and supporting the body. They:

- Engage the parasympathetic nervous system
- Regulate blood flow
- Reduce heat in the body
- Calm the nervous system
- Strengthen the organs

Breath & Hayfever

The single most effective way to reduce your stress levels is to take conscious, deep, abdominal breaths. By moving your awareness out of your head and into your breath, your heart rate slows, your mind is calmed, and your blood oxygenated.

Qigong & Hayfever

Qigong is a fundamental pillar of Chinese medicine. It is classed as a form of internal exercise. Internal exercise is any combination of slow, considered movements with breath and mental engagement, it's often referred to as 'Chinese yoga'. Qigong is, quite simply, the ultimate selfhealing technique. Whatever your issue, qigong will help to rebalance the body. By learning to manipulate qi around the body, you rejuvenate and energise, lower the heart rate and blood pressure and support the immune system.

Tapping & Hayfever

Tapping with bamboo is an ancient Chinese therapy that works wonders for your general well-being. It's a simple, pleasurable, yet hugely effective way to support and maintain your health, no matter what your age or physical state.

Tapping the skin on a daily basis enables the free flow of this all-important circulation. In as little as one minute a day, an all-over body tap can clear areas of stagnation, support lymphatic drainage and encourage a smooth flow of blood and qi around the body. Think of it as a natural battery charger for the body.

Gua sha & Hayfever

Gua sha is a therapeutic healing technique that has been widely practised in China for thousands of years. It involves using a round-edged tool, traditionally made from materials such as jade or metal, to pressstroke the skin until redness appears. You can even use a jam jar lid! Gua sha has been used to treat a whole range of conditions from fever to chronic cough and migraines. It has been shown in studies to increase micro-circulation by 400%, and clear inflammation. Note that gua sha should NOT be used directly on broken skin. However, it can be effective to lessen the marks left by an acne outbreak. There are lots of how-to gua sha videos on my Instagram feed; and you can also download the Gua Sha Guide.

Specific advice

Any symptoms of ill health will always relate to one of the five key organs we consider when we are treating in Chinese medicine. These are Heart, Lung, Liver, Stomach/Spleen and Kidney.

Depending on what your symptoms are, it will usually indicate an imbalance in a specific organ. For example, palpitations are concerned with the heart.

An energetic imbalance does not mean you have a dramatic health issue. This aspect of Chinese medicine is about prevention, not cure. That means reading the subtle signs and symptoms of the body daily. Imbalance starts at an energetic level and you rectify it at an energetic level.

The more serious the symptoms, the deeper the imbalance. If the symptom is mild – e.g. low-level anxiety before a meeting or mild rosacea after a glass of red wine, the imbalance will be easier to rectify.

It is important to know that when I refer to organ imbalance, I mean energetic and not physical. So, for example, heart imbalance does not mean heart disease. It is a subtle signal that your body is not in balance and the strain of that is impacting your heart energy, which may eventually lead to an issue over time. In the first instance, it could be felt as low level anxiety, occasional palpitations or a lack of desire to socialise. We look for the low level signs to stop things getting a foothold in the body and causing a greater problem further down the line.

Use low levels symptoms as a barometer of your wellness. Address them to keep the body healthy and they are much less likely to become a deeper issue. This is the principle behind yang sheng and self-care.

A weak digestive system can lead to chronic acne. In Chinese medicine, spleen and stomach are directors of the digestion, absorption and transmission of nutrition and water, for the need of human life activities of the various organs. If they are not functioning well, what we eat cannot be absorbed by the body properly and it may become toxic waste such as phlegm. When the waste wants to get out of the body, the face can create 'volcanic vents'.
