Skin Conditions Guide

Treatment techniques based in Chinese medicine

What Causes Skin Conditions?

Our skin is the largest organ we have. It's also our direct connection to the outside world, which means that not only is it in direct contact with potentially irritating and/or toxic substances, but also the body uses it to try and push toxicity out.

One of the main causes of toxicity is stress. Stress-related skin problems include eczema, psoriasis, acne, rosacea, ichthyosis, vitiligo, hives, and seborrheic dermatitis. Stress increases levels of toxicity and heat (inflammation) inside the body, disrupting circulation. The body will attempt to restore balance, either through excretion via orifices and skin, or by depositing the toxicity in joints and tissues.

During stress, skin cells in the epidermis produce large quantities of cortisol, which results in elevated sugar levels in the bloodstream. This causes the destruction of collagen and elastin resulting in the loss of elasticity of skin as well as the formation of fine lines and wrinkles.

High levels of cortisol break down the ceramides between skin cells resulting in dehydration. Additionally, cortisol hinders the production of hyaluronic acid, a compound that holds hundreds of times of its weight in water helping to plump our skin cells. This is how stress ages the skin.

The Yang Sheng perspective

‘Yang Sheng’ means ‘nurture life’. It is the ‘self-care’ part of Chinese medicine: the part you can do for yourself, as a complement to any other treatment you may be undertaking.

In addition to physical (visible) symptoms, in Chinese medicine we also consider what is happening with the body at an energetic (invisible) level. ‘Qi’ (pronounced ‘tchee’) is the energy that runs through all of us. Even when you sit completely still, there will be some movement happening inside you: your heart is beating, your fluids moving – every cell is constantly in motion. All of these different types of energy, combined with your breath, is what makes up your ‘qi’.

Qi isn’t the same as circulation, but they are linked. When you stimulate your blood flow or move your lymphatic fluid, your qi is also stimulated. Everything flows together. The channels in which qi flows are called meridians. According to Chinese medicine, the quality and movement of qi through the body determines your health.

The ideal state is one of smooth flow with no imbalances or blockages, which are called ‘stagnation’ or stagnant qi. If you have stagnation, whether physical, emotional or spiritual, this will eventually manifest as disease.

Chinese medicine can have excellent results on common skin conditions where Western medicine’s topical creams and treatments fail. According to Chinese medicine, most common skin conditions arise from a number of issues such as too much heat in the body (inflammation), bad digestion or bad circulation. Excess heat is often the case for psoriasis, acne, anxiety rash and eczema.

As mentioned before, stress and inflammation can leave us feeling tired; appearing aged and with symptoms such as disrupted sleep and digestive issues. These are the warning signs that the body is overloaded. As it desperately works to push toxins out and away from vital organs, the flow of qi is interrupted and unbalanced.

Steps you can take to help

General advice

Chinese breathing and bodywork techniques have both been scientifically proven to be effective in reducing stress and supporting the body. They:

- Engage your parasympathetic nervous system
- Regulate blood flow
- Reduce heat in the body
- Calm the nervous system
- Strengthen the organs

Breath

The single most effective way to reduce your stress levels is to take conscious, deep, abdominal breaths. By moving your awareness out of your head and into your breath, your heart rate slows, your mind is calmed, and your blood oxygenated.

Qigong

Qigong is a fundamental pillar of Chinese medicine. It is classed as a form of internal exercise. Internal exercise is any combination of slow, considered movements with breath and mental engagement, it's often referred to as 'Chinese yoga'. Qigong is, quite simply, the ultimate selfhealing technique. Whatever your issue, qigong will help to rebalance the body. By learning to manipulate qi around the body, you rejuvenate and energise, lower the heart rate and blood pressure and support the immune system.

Tapping

Tapping with bamboo is an ancient Chinese therapy that works wonders for your general wellbeing. It's a simple, pleasurable, yet hugely effective way to support and maintain your health, no matter what your age or physical state. Tapping the skin on a daily basis enables the free flow of this all-important circulation. In as little as one minute a day, an all over body tap can clear areas of stagnation, support lymphatic drainage and encourage a smooth flow of blood and qi around the body. Think of it as a natural battery charger for the body.

Gua sha

Gua sha is a therapeutic healing technique that has been widely practised in China for thousands of years. It involves using a round-edged tool, traditionally made from materials such as jade or metal, to pressstroke the skin until redness appears. You can even use a jam jar lid! Gua sha has been used to treat a whole range of conditions from fever to chronic cough and migraines. It has been shown in studies to increase micro-circulation by 400%, clear inflammation. There are lots of how-to gua sha videos on my Instagram feed; and you can also download the Gua Sha Guide.

Specific advice

Any symptoms of ill health will always relate to one of the five key organs we consider when we are treating in Chinese medicine. These are Heart, Lung, Liver, Stomach/Spleen and Kidney.

Depending on what your symptoms are, it will usually indicate an imbalance in a specific organ. For example, palpitations are concerned with the heart.

An energetic imbalance does not mean you have a dramatic health issue. This aspect of Chinese medicine is about prevention, not cure. That means reading the subtle signs and symptoms of the body daily. Imbalance starts at an energetic level and you rectify it at an energetic level.

The more serious the symptoms, the deeper the imbalance. If the symptom is mild – e.g. low-level anxiety before a meeting or mild rosacea after a glass of red wine, the imbalance will be easier to rectify.

It is important to know that when I refer to organ imbalance, I mean energetic and not physical. So, for example, heart imbalance does not mean heart disease. It is a subtle signal that your body is not in balance and the strain of that is impacting your heart energy, which may eventually lead to an issue over time. In the first instance, it could be felt as low level anxiety, occasional palpitations or a lack of desire to socialise. We look for the low level signs to stop things getting a foothold in the body and causing a greater problem further down the line.

Use low levels symptoms as a barometer of your wellness. Address them to keep the body healthy and they are much less likely to become a deeper issue. This is the principle behind yang sheng and self-care.

Interestingly, dermatology in Chinese is Pi Fu Ke. Pi means 'covering', Fu is 'stomach' and Ke is 'can' or 'may'. The Chinese believe that all skin problems have their root in digestive issues, which are often caused by stress. It is important to treat the internal root cause as well as the bad skin itself. For many suffering from skin conditions, a good place to start would be to eliminate coffee, alcohol and other stimulants, which increase blood pressure and stress on the kidneys, and have a negative effect on the liver.
